The draft contains a statement that policies in favour of radical demands or changes to planning policy in support of measures to drastically reduce the effects of climate change cannot be included because central government policy does not allow this. This cannot be right and should be challenged. If communities chose to act in effect in advance of central government policy because they think that is the responsible thing to do that surely must be supported on the grounds that sometimes local people are ahead of the game and centrally-based authorities have to catch up. Whitehall frequently does not know best.

5. Please give details of any suggested modifications in the box below.

The document needs the introduction of a 'climate change' policy to underwrite the necessity and validity of planning measures to mitigate against the catastrophe of human-induced climate change.
