About the Preparation for Adulthood team

They are a small team of social workers who work with young people aged 14 to 25 years old who may need adult social care support.

They work with young people with special educational needs or disabilities to plan for adulthood.

They want young people to be as independent as possible. They want young people to be able to do the things they want.

They work with young people and their families to find out what support they need as adults. These are called likely needs.

What the Preparation for Adulthood social workers do

They find out what information and advice you, your family or your carer need to help you get ready for adulthood.

They will ask you about your plans and what you want to do when you are an adult.

They will tell you if you can get help with your care and support from the council.

This is called a Care Act assessment.

What happens at your assessment

They will ask you what you like to do.

They will ask you what you are good at.

They will ask you about your plans when you leave school.

This will include things like learning, training, doing voluntary work or getting a job.

They will ask you what skills you want to learn.

What happens at your assessment

They will ask what help you need.

They will talk to you about any worries you have.

They will ask if you have any questions.

They will include your family or carer.

If your parents or carer need an assessment for themselves, this will be arranged.

Getting ready for your assessment

This meeting is about you.

It is important for you to be able to tell us what you want to do when you leave school.

We have prepared some getting ready sheets with things for you to think about. You can write on them and bring them with you to the meeting.

You may have some questions to ask the social worker. You can write these on the getting ready sheets.

The getting ready sheets are at the end of this booklet on pages 11 to 20.

Getting ready for your assessment

You need to think about who you want at the meeting with you.

This could be your parents or carer, or other people you know well.

You may also want to have someone who is independent and who can speak on your behalf. We call this person an advocate.

An advocate gets to know your views and wishes and helps you to tell others. This could be a family member, a friend or someone we arrange for you.

If you would like an advocate to help you, please tell your social worker before the meeting.

What happens after the assessment

The social worker will write notes about what was said.

This will include any information and advice you have been given.

It will also say if you may be eligible for social care support from the council as an adult.

You will be sent a copy of the assessment. We will also send a copy to your advocate if you needed one.

You will be asked if you agree with what has been written. It can be changed if needed.

If your parent or carer had their own assessment, they will be sent this.

What happens after the assessment

If you are likely to be eligible for social care support as an adult, the assessment will be passed to the adult services social work team.

They will start working with you to make sure the right services and support are in place.

If you are not eligible for social care support from the council as an adult the social worker will give you information about other services that may be able to help you in the future.

They may give you some ideas about how to get ready to live as independently as possible when you are an adult.
